

EXTRACTS,

THE BALM OF PROSE AND RHYME.

When the roads are heavy with mire and rut,
In November fogs, in December snows,
When the North Wind howls, and the doors are shut,
There is place and to spare for the pains of prose.
But, whenever a scent from the whitehorn blows,
And the jasmine stars at the littlest clime,
And a Rosalind face at the osierment shows,
Then hark! for the ripple of laughing rhyme!

When the brain gets dry as an empty net,
When the reason stands on its squeaked toes,
When the mind (like a beard) has a "fornal cut,"
There is place and to spare for the pains of prudence,
But whenever the May-blood stirs and glows,
And the young year draws to the "wanton prime,"
Whenever Sir Romeo counting goes,
Then hey! to the riddle of laughing rhyme!

In a theme where the thoughts did not strut,
In a changing quartet of "Ayes" and "Noes,
In a starchy procession of "If" and "But"—
There is place and to spare for the pains of youth
But whenever a soft glance softer grows,
And the birds are glad in the pairing time,
And the secret is told "that no one knows,"
Then hey!—for the ripple of laughing rhyme!

ENVOY.

In the valley of life—for its needs and woes,
There is pain; and to spare for the pains of joy
But whenever the joy-bells clash and chime,
Then hark!—for the ripple of laughing rhyme

A MIRACULOUS CASE OF DEN

FISTRY.

A miraculous case of dentistry in the story of Dr. Shado is recorded in spiritual circles. Some time ago the worthy man was tormented by a tooth that would not come out, and one day, sitting close to a fire-stove, he said, "I've got sharp through that tooth again. I feel Ovaso." Whether Ovasaso is the name of a spirit-mechanic in the heart of dentistry, or whether it is merely the name of the extractor, is not recorded. But the feeling Ovasaso had to do with the feeling Ovasaso, a doctor spat out the tooth, and, applying his tongue to his grin, discovered such a case might have been forced there after operation in dentistry. A similar case has been long current in spiritualistic circles on On-Tye, where an individual suffering from toothache, by touching the offending member pulled out the Ovasaso or some other member of the dental faculty of dentists.

CURIOUS DEATHS AMONG THE

ANCIENTS.

It is not a little singular that the laurel scarcely ever failed to make the hero of their literary heroes no laurelless in his leaves. Homer, the chief of our classic poets, could not guess at a hero as Horace had been warned by a witty chit-chat-box would be his death. Homer been warned by an oracle that he would be killed by a riddle. And came. Seeing—or rather hearing, tradition of his blindness is too univ-sally discredited—some young Saboteur boat, he unfortunately asked who they had had. The answer, they replied, was that we caught you left, as man could not catch we carry with us." Too much for the author of the "Eneid," he guessed and guessed till he could go no longer, and finally died of sheer vexation. According to Gregory Nazianzen, Marivier, and Eustathius, Aristotle was precisely the same way, because he understood a riddle, and was increasing rich by it, namely, the cause of the death and flogging of the Euripus. "Sir indignantly exclaimed, "I cannot receive the Euripus, let the Euripus receive me!" Diogenes, the ingenious of the "hoaxed" and "vexed" having met with his usual kind of "vexation," thought him still another sophist. He was unable to solve, went home, took about it, and died of despair. A wrote Plutarch, speaking of Clearchus, the second's death, "should disdain to only disappear"—abscond, that is, into the other world. Now as Clearchus, in his bed, and was a most uncommon time about doing so, as he happened remarked to his sister, "I am going," said he have illustrated. Plutarch's, but if we are to believe Athenians and Philotas, though not a king, but a actually died. He had reduced by such a pitch of tenuity by reflection as that he was obliged to wear lead so boots to keep himself from rising away, or possibly from rising in the celestial sphere. The hero of Plutarch's was an Athenian gravel, an attribution he positively ex-husband no more was departed, and he prolonged under his ciroes until it was under these circumstances that the heartbroken wife entered her husband's bedroom for the last time. Meeting they were destined to have on another day. Distressed at the amazing bitterness of grief, but unoppressed at the imminent prospect of death, the General turned to his English nurse and ordered the room to be made fireproof. "Did I not tell you your life was better for soldiers," she said, "their lives in their hands, to go into battle without having wives and children to meet them if they fall?" Shortly before his departure, when he was alone, he remembered that when and where delirium had been in, because of the official reports and with an expression of relief, "Let us cross over the river, rest under the shade of the trees." It was which was accompanied by as large a quantity of blood as was probably ever poured forth within four years. General Jackson was the only other officer of distinction who died in the field during the American Civil War. In order to do this, he had to lead the battle of Gettysburg. His fond regret should also know, "But, nevertheless, there never was a war in which some devoted man have not insisted upon accompanying husbands into the field and sharing bivouac, with a view, should occasion arise, of nursing them when wounded." He reminded me of the death, God send, of the widow of Lieutenant Lord, of the 48th Foot, of Lichfield has just announced as having occurred at Plymouth from the passage of the Duero on 12th; 1809, until the battle of Salamanca fought on July 22nd, 1812, she was the constant companion of her husband, and the changeless friend and confidante of more than half the battles of the Peninsular War. More who are well versed in the details of military history will be able, from memory, to mention many similar cases, and hence the cause which has often heretofore been deemed again invitation, whether it be true or not, that, under every circumstance, it is almost certain to be the companions of those who best love, in the operations of active

In note to his little work son, Major Colton tells us that upon the Waterloo many females were found near the dead, and that all of them were tired, and were known to have been so in their bearing and as suggestive of ordinary women, when shown the picture of the Frenchman, (all mortally wounded), having, it is said, killed one of his own elacopriots, a French officer, who had been shot under him, seized the mental colors of the 32nd Foot, who were carried by Lieutenant Boland. A Frenchman, and the Frenchman's daughter, saw his daughter, who was a Frenchman of a halibut, and immediately was shot by a soldier named when it was vain that Major Colton ever saw it was too late. THE AMBER TRADE.

German newspapers state that the yield of amber procured from the Baltic has fallen very seriously of late years, and shows symptoms of improvement. Notwithstanding violent storms, which as a rule increase the quantity, there has again been a poor yield this summer. Farmers of amber reaches have not, in many cases, recovered their outlay. For instance, reaches on which £100 is paid annually for the right of search have realised only about £25. Almost the amber now brought into the market is said to be the produce of mines.
